Marc Fucarile, at the age of 35, became a right leg above the knee amputee from the Boston Marathon Bombings on April 15, 2013. On that day his life changed forever, leaving him with new and difficult challenges. Marc, being a dad to his 5 year old son Gavin at the time of the tragedy, did not let this stop him, it only gave him motivation to work harder. Now Marc is not only a father to his 11 year old son but also a mentor to so many other young children and adults by volunteering his time and efforts to people with missing limbs, limb differences, autism and many other disabilities through nonprofit organizations like Camp No Limits, Granite State Adaptive Sports and others.

Speaker: Peter Shackford, Director of Safety & Risk Control Services

Hettrick, Cyr & Associates, Inc.

Tuesday — March 19, 2019, 9:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m.

Whether you're working on steep slope single family homes, large high rises or flat roof box stores, fall hazards exist and roofers are finding them! Workers in the roofing industry are three times more likely to experience fatal work-related injuries than other construction workers. 75 - 80% of roofing industry fatalities are related to falls. This workshop aims to expel some of the many myths and misunderstanding relating to fall protection and OSHA regulations. These myths not only lead to injuries and fatalities, they are also the result of OSHA citation and fines. Fall protection is the most frequently cited standard by OSHA. Understanding the regulation is the law. We will review common causes of these falls as well as discuss resources and techniques available for low and steep slope projects which can help prevent citation, injury and fatality.

- I don't need fall protection when inspecting roof: MYTH
- I'm protected from falls if I remain 6" and greater from the edge: MYTH
- Stringing this cable between two anchors will provide a good anchorage point: MYTH
- Warning lines 6' from the roof edge is sufficient regardless of the type of work I'm doing: MYTH
- Roofing repair crews have different fall protection requirements: MYTH
- "We can all monitor each other": MYTH

Above are just some of the fall protection myths commonly thrown around the roofing industry. After attending this course you will have a better grasp of OSHA requirements, how and where falls most frequently occur and most importantly... tips and techniques on how to prevent them! (This educational offering is recognized by MA & RI as satisfying educational credits towards renewal of the Construction Supervisors License (CSL) requirement.)
